Applications promptly attended to, and Policies written without delay, and at fair rates and liberal terms. Losses liberally adjusted and promptly paid. INSURE TO DAY! By one day's delay you may lose the savings of years. Delays are dangerous, and life uncertain; therefore, Insure to-day! "One to-day, is worth two to-morrows."—Quality, also, is of the utmost importance. The low priced, worthless article, always proves the dearest. The above companies are known to be amongst the best and wealthiest in the world.—"As ye sow that shall you reap."

Grateful for the very liberal patronage already bestowed, I hope—by a strict attention to a legitimate business—not only to merit a continuence of the same, but a large increase the present year.

Mr. STEPHEN A. CRAIG is duly authorized to take applications for Insurance and receive the premium for the same in adjoining townships.

SELECT MISCELLANY.

MR. HAYWARD'S WILL.

BY LELIA.

It was a wild, gloomy evening. The wind sighed wearily like some poor tired thing crying for rest; the sea moaned dismally, and the waves arose, fell, rose again, rushing up the wild sandy beach, clutching all within their reach, then hurrying back, murmuring hoarsely. The huge bank of clouds scudding rapidly to the west, with an occasional peal of thunder, followed by a quick flash of lightning, all foretold a long and terrible storm.

I shut the gate with a loud bang, and drawing my overcoat closer around me, walked rapidly along the deserted path. What a position for me to be in—a young and rising barrister, instead of comfortably enjoying myself at home, with the grand poetic beauty of the storm at a distance, here I was, out on such a night, going to a village just two miles off for—gout remedy, bah! 'Twas all Aunt Bet's fault. What possessed her, I wonder, to take a fancy—on this night of all others—that the gout would trouble her, and that unless she had the remedy she would be unable to sleep. But you see Aunt had a snug little fortune of her own, and I expected to come in for a pretty large slice of it on her demise, so when she asked if I'd go for the remedy (which, by the way, was "warranted to cure all aches and pains within three days after application, or money refunded,") I answered yes, swallowing my vexation as best I could.

The storm burst in all its fury just as I reached the village, and executing my errand with all dispatch, I was returning with two bottles of the confounded stuff lying snugly in my pocket, when the night train streamed slowly into the depot.

With idle curiosity I stopped to watch the passengers alight; there were the usual amount of fat woman and squalling babies, but there were two people who particularly attracted my attention. One was an old man, of about sixty-five or seventy years of age; he seemed quite ill, and was leaning upon the arm of one of the most beautiful young woman I ever saw. Her complexion was of that dark olive color one sees in intensely tropical climes; her eyes were large, bright and black, while her hair, of which there was a great profusion, was of that beautiful light auburn color called "Titian gold."

Just now her face wore a worried, anxious expression, and she kept turning around every minute like one who is fleeing from justice, and expects every moment to be confronted by an officer of the law.

Seeing me observing her so intently, she advanced, hesitatingly, and asked in a low, musical voice if I could inform her where Hayward House was. Of course, I said I would be delighted to show her to the place, and, so offering one arm to her and the other to the old gentleman, we hurried over the muddy, slushy road toward the town; the wind and rain prevented all attempts at conversation, and so we were busy with our own thoughts.

Hayward House was an old rambling edifice which had long lain in disuse, until at last the good people of C—— were commencing to tell grievous tales about the place, when suddenly all the town was thrown into excitement by an old woman, who called herself Mr. Hayward's housekeeper, coming up and going [illegible]. Since then [illegible] been on the qui vive as to who the occupants of the place were going to be, and now here they were, coming almost at "that very witching hour of night," and heralded in by a storm such as had never visited C—— for many a day.

Who were they? What were they? What is their business here? These, and many other questions I asked myself, and when we arrived at the great rusty gate of the park I was as near to the solution of the mystery as when we first left the depot.

A bright light burned in the house, and as I escorted them up the path, the great oak door flung wide open, and the old woman stepped out on the porch, without uttering a word she drew the old gentleman inside, and left the girl and me alone; she turned, and holding out both hands said with a sweet smile,

"Thank you Mr. ——"

"Golman," I said.

"Mr. Golman, we are much obliged to you for your kindness," and with a warm pressure of both hands she turned and left me, shutting out all the light with her, and I walked home, bringing with me the remembrance of a very bright pair of eyes and the knowledge that I had left my heart behind me.

Next morning I called to inquire after the young lady who had so charmed me. Miss Lee, as I found her name to be, received me very kindly, and made the time pass so pleasantly that the shadows were fast deepening on the park without before I arose to go.

That was the commencement of our acquaintance, which progressed rapidly. We were always together, took walks and rides, went on woodland excursions, boat rides, picnics, etc., etc., until the good folks around began to couple our names as engaged. Ah me! what a happy time that was. I had learned to love her passionately, and only wanted her assurance that my love was returned to complete my happiness.

Hr. Hayward had only one child, a daughter, who had been placed in a convent in France immediately after her mother's death. Nina and her mother had been with him a long, lone time, Mrs. Lee as housekeeper and Nina as—well, it was hard to define Nina's position in the household; she was amanuensis, companion, and did a great many other duties which prevented her from being entirely dependent upon her mother's or Mr. H.'s bounty. Mr. H. had a nephew, too, a wild, reckless sort of a fellow, whom his uncle had disinherited and disowned.

All this, Nina told me one evening, when we were out in the woods getting mosses. We were sitting by a pretty babbling brook, she, so that the last rays of the setting sun enveloped her in a golden halo, her fair face wore a soft, dreamy expression, the head bent shyly, was crowned with a wreath of wild flowers, from under which the beautiful hair fell in wild luxuriance. It was like some lovely picture—the old gnarled trees forming a green background, while the straggling branches, stirred by some fitful breeze, would touch with caressing fingers the soft pink cheek.

Scarce knowing what I did, I threw my arm around her slender waist and drawing her trembling form close to me, told her all the love which I had kept concealed so long. I could feel her heart throb wildly while I spoke, and when I finished one round white arm crept gently round my neck, and hiding the blushing face on my breast she softly told me that my love was returned.

For three weeks after that I was in the "Fool's Paradise;" three long happy weeks and then the blow came.

I had gone to see her one evening; as usual she met me at the door, pale, wild, frightened, two red spots burned like fire on her dusky cheeks, while her eyes fairly blazed.

"Charlie," she said in a dry hard voice, "Mr. Hayward's dying."

I was selfish in my great happiness that I cared for nothing else, so I said, "what matters that to us?"

"A great deal," she answered quickly, "Charlie"—with a wild pathos in her voice—"oh, Charlie, do you love me?"

With a man's carelessness I tried to laugh off her nervousness; so, striking a position, I said:

"Doubt that truth's a liar, but never doubt I love."

"Nonsense!" she cried sharply, while the flush left her cheeks, crept slowly to her forehead, and then all over her face, and the large eyes fell.

"Charlie, do—you—love—me—enough—to do a very dishonorable action for me?"

All my levity vanished in a moment. I must have looked very much shocked, for she added quickly:

"Oh, darling, I love you so; it's for you more than myself;" and then dragging me to a seat beside her, folding her two white arms around me and resting her false head on my bosom, she told me what she wished me to do.

While she spoke in the soft low tones, I felt as if an iron hand was grasping my heart, and with every word she uttered, the love I bore her gradually turned to hatred.

Mr. Hayward was dying, she said, and wished to make a will leaving everything to his daughter; she was rich, and had plenty of money from other sources, what was to prevent our making another will, and let him sign it, thinking it the right one? she had one drawn up leaving all of his property to her, and a small annuity to his daughter. I was a lawyer, and my presence would be all that was necessary, and would do it?

She waited awhile to hear my answer; then pressing her rich red lips to mine, she cried wildly,

"It's because I love you so—because I love you so. We are poor and cannot marry for years yet. Why spend a life-time struggling with poverty when wealth is within our grasp?"

I put her from me, and rose. She glanced up at me with a frightened look in her dark eyes.

"Oh, darling?" she cried; "don't look as if you hated me—don't!"

I drew a long breath and looked her standing there, in all the glory of her womanhood; the flickering fire-light lending a deeper tinge to the flush on her cheek, to the golden hair. My heart throbed wildly. All the memory of the love I bore her came rushing back. I caught her passionately to my bosom, and rained kisses on her face, her lips for the last time—the last time, and I had loved her so!

I took up my hat mechanically. I was only going to the office to get some needful thing, I told her, and then with a little sobbing cry I went from her, out into the darkness.

My brain was filled with wild, angry thoughts. When I reached the office everything was as I left it, books and paper lying around in confusion. I remembered when I had gone from it, scarce an hour ago, saying to myself that she would soon be mine, wholly mine. I thought of the bright picture I had conjured up of a neat little home with her as the—but pshaw! why torment myself with thoughts of what might have been. She could never be my wife now, I told myself, as I raised my desk and took from it a tiny inkstand, fancyfully wrought, of ebony and gold. I had bought it years ago, solely on account of its beauty, little Nina [illegible] room immediately upon my return. It was a dark, gloomy-looking room; in one corner was a large old-fashioned bed on which Mr. Hayward was lying, a small table was drawn close to the bed, and placing my inkstand upon it, I drew a chair up. He started on seeing me, and when I had taken my seat, commenced in a thin cracked voice to dictate what I should write. The will was very short; he bequeathed everything to his daughter, saying, in conclusion, "As my nephew has behaved so badly, I leave him only my best wishes that he may reform."

At these words a quick gleam passed over Nina's face, and she handed me the other will. I took it, and dropping a pen in the other inkstand, handed it to him with the other will. He seized the pen, and in large, straggling letters signed his name. Mrs. Lee, Nina and I then signed as witnesses, and the deed was done. All this time the old man had been failing rapidly, and already the death-dew stood on his brow. Nina and her mother left the room; now was the time; I took the right will—which I had drawn up at his dictation—and stooped over him.

"Mr. Hayward," I said in a clear, firm voice, "sign this will, the other was a fraudulent one, disinheriting your daughter—sign, or she will be ruined!"

"Ruined!" he gasped, "Nellie ruined!"

He caught the pen and commenced to sign, I guiding his hand; he had just made an H, when the pen fell from his trembling hand, making a large blot on the paper, and rolling down the sheet fell with a dull bump to the floor; the sound startled him.

"Nellie ruined!" he gasped again.

There was a gargling sound in his throat, a quiver ran through the whole body, and convulsively clutching at the air, he fell back, white, staring-dead.

The door opened and Nina came in, accompanied by a man who bore a wonderful likeness to the one whose death struggle I had just witnessed.

"Mr. Golman," she said, with a cold smile on her siren face, "I shan't have any more use for your services at present; please present your bill to this gentleman, who is Mr. Hayward's nephew, and"—with a sweeping curtsy—"my husband."

I gave her one look, and turned and left her, as I had once before that night, with hatred, despair and horror filling my soul.

Mr. Hayward was buried with great pomp and ceremony, and a few days later the new owners took possession of the property.

I stayed to see that settled and then left for France, and on my arrival there went immediately to the convent and asked for Miss Hayward. She was a small, pretty girl, with a profusion of dark hair. She was attired in deep mourning, and seemed overwhelmed with grief at the loss of her father. After the burst of tears were over, she told me that she intended starving with the Sisters.

"That you should not do," I said quietly; "you should leave here as soon as possible and go to England; it will be exactly three months after your father's death when you arrive there, should you leave at once, and then you can enter on your property."

She looked at me, a puzzled expression on the pretty face.

"How," she said, "am I not disinherited?"

"Fear not," I said, "the God of the fatherless will protect you."

She raised her blue, tearful eyes to mine and answered, "I'll trust to God and go."

We left France and arrived in England a few days after the expiration of the three months. I procured a good lawyer, and we went immediately to C——. The great station clock was on the stroke of eight when we reached the depot, and a brisk walk of fifteen minutes brought us to the house. How changed it was. The lawn had been cleared of all the weeds and shrubbery, and now instead of tangled underbrush, a level expanse of green stretched all the way up to the house, which was brilliantly lighted; sweet music floated out on the night air, and the figures passing and repassing gave the house the appearance of much revelry within.

Nellie clung to my arm as if afraid, but could not suppress a cry of delight at the brilliant scene which met our eyes as I flung open the door and entered.

It was a grand party, the large room was filled with men and women, whose magnificent dresses were reflected in the mirrors that lined the walls.

The hostess and her husband saw me at the same time; with a terrible oath he sprang toward me.

"What is the meaning of this?" he exclaimed.

I pushed Nellie forward, saying:

"Miss Nellie has come to claim her right."

He laughed nervously. "She can't do it. I have my Uncle's will made in my wife's favor and with his signature."

"Show it," I cried; you have nothing of the kind."

The guests had gathered in a frightened group at one end of the room, and stood looking on with sacred faces.

Paul Hayward walked hastily to an adjoining room; when he returned, he held a folded paper in his hand. With a triumphant look he commenced to read it, when suddenly glancing at the bottom, he turned deadly pail and staggered backward; the lawyer looking over his shoulders saw that the place where the signatures of Mr. H. and the witnesses should have been were perfectly blank. My friends, the ink with which the papers were signed was a kind warranted to fade completely away within three months after writing.

Hayward turned to the lawyer, "This will is worth nothing," he said, interrogatively.

"Nothing," was the reply.

"She," pointing to Nelly, will get all.

The lawyer bent his head, "everything?" he said

All this time Hayward's right hand had been resting carelessly in his pocket; at the lawyers last words I heard a click, a loud report, and felt a sharp pain in the shoulder.

"Then, by ——, I shoot you, for you are the cause."

There were cries, shrieks, the tramp of many feet, then the room, with all its bright adornments, faded slowly from my sight, and—

I lay for many weeks between life and death, in the delirium of brain fever, but I fought through it, and one day when the sun was shining gladly and the birds singing as if there was no sorrow or sadness in the world, Nellie told me that her cousin had been caught and imprisoned but that his wife had escaped and had so successfully eluded the detectives that the search was given up as vain; that, late one day, a woman heavily cloaked arrived on the evening train, and the next morning the latter was found with a dagger in his heart, and the prisoner and the woman both gone; that the lawyer had been so very kind, and during my illness had settled everything about the estate, and proven her to be the rightful owner. "I like him so much," she said, while the tell-tale blushes chased each other over her [illegible] you are well.

I stayed to see them married and settled in their new home, and then, loath to look on the familiar scenes which were connected with so much joy and sorrow, I left the land of my birth and went to foreign climes.

One day I stumbled by chance into a quiet little village nestling at the foot of a green clad hill; a large crowd was gathered in front of what seemed to be a court house.

"What's the matter?" I inquired of a ruddy faced, stout old gentleman.

He turned to me with a horrified expression on his genial face.

"Has Monsieur not heard," he asked in a surprised tone, "of the great robbery and murder?"

I shook my head.

"Have the perpetrators of the deed been caught," I asked.

He nodded yes; "they are a man and woman, but," stepping aside, "perhaps Monsieur will see for himself."

I entered the court room—the sentence had just been passed. I glanced at the prisoners. Great God! the man was Paul Hayward. I turned to the woman; a frightened look was on her dark face, her eyes were large and black, the falling hair formed a golden aureole around the beautiful face, the face of the only woman I ever loved, the face of—NINA LEE.

THE UNNATURAL FATHER.

A True Story.

Many years ago I happened to be one of the referees in a case that excited unusual interest in our courts, from the singular nature of the claim, and the strange story which it disclosed. The plaintiff, was captain of a ship which traded principally with the West Indies, had married quite early, with every prospect of happiness. His wife was said to have been extremely beautiful, and no less lovely in her character.

After living with her in the most uninterrupted harmony for five years, during which time two daughters were added to the family, he suddenly resolved to resume his occupation, which he had relinquished on his marriage, and when his youngest child was but three weeks old, sailed once more for the West Indies. His wife, who was devotedly attached to him, sorrowed deeply at his absence, and found her only comfort in the society of her children and the hope of his return. But month after month passed away and he came not, nor did any letters, those insufficient but welcome substitues, arrive to cheer her solitude. Months lengthened into years, yet no tidings were received from the absent husband; and, after hoping against hope, the unhappy wife was compelled to believe that he had found a grave beneath the weltering ocean.

Her sorrow was deep and heartfelt, but the evils of poverty were now added to her afflictions, and the widow found herself obliged to resort to some employment in order to support her children. Her needle was the only resource, and for ten years she labored early and late for the miserable pittance which is ever grudgingly bestowed on an humble seamtress.

A merchant in New York, in moderate but prosperous circumstances, accidentally became acquainted with her, and, pleased with her gentle manners no less than her extreme beauty, he endeavored to improve their acquaintance into friendship.

After some months he offered his hand, and was accepted. As the wife of a successful merchant she soon found herself in the enjoyment of comforts and luxuries such as she had never before possessed. Her children became his children and received from him every advantage which wealth and affection could procure.

Fifteen years passed away, the daughters were married, and by their step-father were furnished with every comfort requisite to their new avocation as housekepers. But they had hardly quitted his roof when their mother was taken ill. She died after a few days, and from that time until the period of which I speak, the widower had resided with the younger sister

Now comes the strange part of the story. After an absence of over thirty years, during which time no tidings had arrived from him, the first husband returned as suddenly as he had departed.

He had changed his ship, adopted another name, and spent the whole of that long period on the ocean, with only transient visits on shore; while taking in or discharging cargoes, having been careful never to come nearer home than New Orleans. Why he had acted in this unpardonable manner toward his family no one could tell, and he obstinately refused an explanation.

There were some strange rumors of slave-trading and piracy afloat, but they were whispers of conjecture rather than truth. Whatever might have been his motives for his conduct, he was certainly anything but indifferent to his family concerns when he returned. He raved like a madman when informed of his wife's second marriage and subsequent death, vowing vengence upon his successor, and terrifying his daughters by the most awful threats in case they refused to acknowledge his claims. He had returned wealthy, and one of the mean reptiles of the law, who are always to be found crawling about the halls of justice, advised him to bring a suit against the second husband, assuring him that he could recover heavy damages. The absurdity of instituting a claim for a wife whom death had released from the jurisdiction of earthly laws, was so manifest that it was at length agreed by all parties to leave the matter to be adjudged by five referees.

It was upon a bright, beautiful afternoon in spring, when we met to hear this singular case. The sunlight streamed through the dusty windows of the court-room, and shed a halo around the long gray locks and broad forehead of the defendant—while the plaintiff's harsh features were thrown into still bolder relief by the same beam which softened the placed countenances of his adversary.

The plaintiff's lawyer made a most eloquent appeal for his client, and had we not been informed about the matter, our hearts would have been melted by the touching description of the return of the desolate husband, and the agony of which he now beheld his household goods, removed to consecrate a stranger's hearth.

The celebrated Aaron Burr was council for the defendent, and we anticipated from him a splendid display of eloquence. Contrary to our expectations, however, he made no attempt to confute his opponents oratory. He merely opened a book of statutes, and pointing with his thin finger to one of the pages, desired the referees to read it, while he retired a moment for the principal witness.

We had scarcely finished the section, which fully decided the matter in our minds, when Burr re-entered with a tall and elegant female leaning on his arm. She was attired in a simple white dress, with a wreath of ivy encircling her large straw bonnet, and a lace veil completely concealing her countenance. Burr whispered a few words, apparently encouraging her to advance, and then gracefully raising her veil, discovered to us a face of proud, surpassing [illegible] taneous the murmur [illegible] as if it burst from the lips of all present. Turning to the plaintiff, Mr. Burr asked, in a cold, quiet way:

"Do you know this lady?"

"I do."

"Will you swear to that?"

"I will. To the best of my knowledge and belief she is my daughter."

"Can you swear to the identity?"

"I can."

"What is her age?"

"She was thirty years old on the 20th day of April."

"When did you see her last?"

"At her own house about a fortnight since."

"When did you see her previous to that meeting."

"The plaintiff hesitated—a long pause ensued—the question was repeated, and the answer at length was:

"On the 14th day of May, 17—."

"When she was just three weeks old!" added Burr.

"Gentlemen," continued he, turning to us, "I have brought this lady here as an important witness, and such, I think, she is. The plaintiff's counsel has pleaded eloquently in behalf of the bereaved husband, who escaped the perils of the sea, and returned only to find his home desolate. But who will picture to you the lonely wife, bending over her daily toil, devoting her best years to the drudgery and sordid poverty, supported only by the hope of her husband's return? Who will picture the slow process of heart sickening, the anguish of hope deferred, and finally the overwhelming agony which came upon her when her last hope was extinguished, and she was compelled to believe herself a widow? Who can depict all this without awakening in your hearts the warmest sympathy for the deserted wife, and the utmost scorn for the mean, pitiful wretch who could thus, trample on the heart of her whom he swore to love and cherish? We need not inquire into his motive for acting so base a part. Whether it was love or gain, or licentiousness or selfish indifference, it matters not; he is too vile a thing to be judged by such laws as govern men. Let us ask the witness—she now stands before us with the frank, fearless brow of a true-hearted woman—let us ask which of these has been to her a father."

Turning to the lady, in a tone whose sweetness as a strange contrast with the scornful accent that just characterized his words, he besought her to relate briefly the recollections of her early life. A slight flush passed over her proud and beautiful face as she replied:

"My first recollections are of a small ill-furnished apartment, which my sister and myself shared with my mother. She used to carry out every Saturday evening the work which had occupied her during the week, and bring back employment for the following one. Saving this wearisome visit to her employers, and her regular attendance at church, she never left the house. She often spoke of my father, and of his anticipated return, but at length she ceased to mention him, though I observed she used to weep more frequently than ever. I then thought she wept because we were poor, for it sometimes happened that our support was only a bit of bread; and she was accused to sew by the light of the chips which she kindled to warm her famishing children, because she could not purchase a candle without depriving us of our morning meal. Such was our poverty when my mother contracted a second marriage, and the change to us was like a sudden entrance to Paradise. We found a home and a father." She paused.

"Would you turn my own child against me?" cried the plaintiff, as he impatiently waved his hand for her to be silent.

The eyes of the witness flashed fire as she spoke.

"You are not my father!" exclaimed she vehemently. "What! call you my father—you, who so basely left your wife to toil, and your children to beggarly? Never! Never! Behold their my father!" pointing to the agitated defendant. "There is the man who watched over my infancy—who was the sharer of my childish sports, and the guardian of my inexperienced youth. There is the man who claims my affection and shares my home; there is my father. As for yonder selfish wretch, I know him not. The best years of his life have been spent in lawless freedom from social ties; let him seek elsewhere, from the companions of his discreptitude, nor dare insult the ashes of my mother by claiming the duties of kindred from her deserted children."

She drew her veil closely around her as she finished speaking, and moved as if about to withdraw.

"Gentlemen," said Burr, "I have no more to say. The words of the law are expressed in the book before you; the words of truth you have heard from woman's pure lips; it is for you to decide according to the requisitions of nature and the decrees of justice."

I need not say that our decision was in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff went forth followed by the contempt of every honorable person who was present at the trial.

The National Homestead at Gettysburg.

The National Homestead for the Orphans of Soldiers of the United States, incorporated by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and formerly inaugurated at Gettysburg in 1866, has since been in successful operation. Both its establishment and its beneficent work are due solely to the spontaneous charity of a philanthropic public. Its support has been entirely independent of either State or National appropriation. From a thousand Sabbath scholars in eighteen States contribulations have been received, while many private individuals have sent their free gifts. One hundred and sixty dependent children—orphans of soldiers and sailors—from sixteen States of the Union, have been brought to enjoy its privileges, and are the best evidences of its tender care and culture. It is national in its aim, and proposes a perpetual home and school for orphans of the whole country. At present, it receives orphans only of the army and navy. Its management has been most judicious, contemplating the mental and moral culture, as well as the physical development of the orphans entrusted to its care, training them to habits of industry and thrift, and fitting them to be good and useful citizens. For the accomplishment of these ends, its management has been conducted with great fidelity and success. From our personal acquaintance with those who have had it in charge, and our observation of its practical working, we most cheerfully certify to its having justified not only its promises, but our highest anticipations. But we are authorized to state the institution is in need of the means to insure its wider and more beneficient results, and the earnest hope is entertained that this want shall not be allowed by a generous public to embarrass its future career of noble usefulness. All who would share in giving it aid, may please communicate with J. Francis Bourns, M. D., general secretary, No 330 Walnut street, Philadelphia, or send their gifts direct to Peter B. Simons, treasurer, No. 619 Sansom street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A New Orleans Judge Weighing the Evidence.

A short time since a worthy magistrate of this city had rather a difficult question to decide, in the solution of which he struck out a path hitherto unknown in jurisprudence. It seems that twelve negroes appeared before him, one of whom swore positively that himself and the other eleven had done a certain amount of work on a steamboat, and was entitled thereby to wages. It was a steady streak, each of the dozen swearing precisely the same. On the other side appeared the mate of the boat and eleven deck hands, who all twelve swore directly and point blank to an opposite state of facts to those testified to by the twelve plaintiffs. Here the evidence closed, leaving the judge to make up his mind.

His honor scratched his head, looked wise, pondered a few moments, and then said: "The law makes it the duty of the court, when in doubt, to weigh the evidence. I shall proceed to do so in this case. "You," turning to one of the suing darkeys, "take your crowd over to Mr. —a grocery store in the vicinity; and have them weighed, and bring me a certificate of their weight from the clerk. And you," turning to the mate, "do the same with yoruself and witnesses. This court must make up a judgment somehow."

The mandate of the court was obeyed; the contestants appeared with their respective certificates, the mate's party outweighing the other by nine pounds, which was sufficient to turn the scales of justice, for judgment was given for the boat.—N. O. Picayune.

The Financial World.

Another financial panic! Gold rising to 117½, and Wall street this week on fire! There is something in the mystery of money which plain men can hardly understand. Why should bullion rise when the national credit is in the ascendant? Everybody of mature age recollects the doubts thrown over our paper currency, and yet to-day it is as profoundly respected and confided in as specie; a greenback or a national bank note is accepted in every State, Territory, county, township, and school district in the land. We have no doubt that millions of these notes are hoarded away. Our credit is almost at the head of the nations of the earth. The mere fact that we could pay off our entire national indebtedness ten times quicker than France paid off, or is paying off, its obligations to Germany, shows the supreme value of the securities of this Government. Our people trust with ceaseless trust in the Republic. Their energies are endless, their resources exhaustless. And yet this rise in gold and the subsequent depreciation in paper currency would seem to be a proclamation of bankruptcy. There is nothing so dreary as financial platitudes, nothing so unsatisfactory as the eternal talk about the laws of trade, and we think sometimes those who indulge in these theories know as little as the multitudes they mystify. The common-sense question recurs. Why should a great nation, with a paying people, an unstained credit, and exhaustless resources, be subjected by the stock-jobbers in a few great cities to these periodical panics?—Philadelphia Press.

THE Butler Eagle says there is a movement on foot in that county to bring out two Republican candidates for assembly, in opposition to Messrs. Waldron and McKee, the present representatives in the Legislature, who, it seems, have given offence to one wing of the party in that county. Lively times are anticipated over there, politically considered.

THE election in Connecticut on the 7th inst, resulted in the election of Ingersoll (Dem.) for Governor by a majority of near 3,500. The Legislature on joint ballot is also Democratic. On the other hand, however, the Republicans have elected three out of the four congressmen. The Republicans carried the State last year by a majority of 2,000.

SPEAKING of the necessity of repealing the salary act which made the steal of the last Congress possible, The St. Louis Democrat says: "Mr. Erastus Wells, member from the IId District of this city, promises to introduce a bill on the first of the December session to reestablish the old rate of $5,000 per annum. By so doing he will entitle himself to the applause of the country, and the men who vote against him may bid fare-well to public life."

H. J. MASON, Esq, reporter for the Pennsylvania Senate, died suddenly at the Lochiel Hotel in Harrisburg on last Wednesday morning. Heart disease, is supposed to have been the cause of his death. His residence was in New York but for many winters past, he has been employed by the Senate of our State as its phonographic reporter. Senator Rutan offered a joint resolution appropriating five hundred dollars to defray the funeral expenses of the deceased. Mr. Mason is highly spoken of by those who knew him well.

A BILL of considerable importance to the Supreme and Common Pleas judges of this State was defeated in the House at Harrisburg on last Wednesday. The proposition was to pay any Judge of the Supreme Court who has served fifteen years, and Common Pleas Judges who have served the full term of twenty years, an annuity of one half the amount of the salary. The bill was strongly advocated by Messrs. Orvis, Mitchell and Speaker Elliott, and was opposed by Lane, Wolfe, Hancock and Ammerman. In support of the resolution, it was shown that Judges retired after twenty years' service were compelled, in their old age, to return to the practice of their profession; the salary was so small they could not lay up anything for a "rainy day," and instances were cited of Judges, who, after serving the State with fidelity for a quarter of a century, retired from the bench in absolute poverty. On the other hand, it was contended the annuity system would create an aristocracy, and would establish a bad precedent. On a test vote, the bill was lost by ayes 36, nays 53.

THE Mormon muddle in Utah seems to be approaching a peaceful solution at last. A newspaper at St Louis has a special telegram from Salt Lake City, dated [illegible] speaks daily of abdicating, and for some time past preparations have been making for a Mormon exodus southward. A large number will leave in a few days with Young at their head. Their destination is the valleys bordering on the San Francisco Mountains, in Arizona, near the Texas Pacific Railroad. Brigham Young, in anticipation, has resigned the Presidency of the Deseret National Bank, the Zion's Company, a co-operative mercantile institution, and the railroad, and is respectively succeeded by Hon. W. H. Hooper, General Eldridge and William Jennings. Young sees his power diminishing, and seeks a new locality, where he can be supreme. The Mormon problem in Utah is solved, and the war will be transferred to Arizona. Some prominent Mormons, with large business interests, state that they will remain until they sell out. Brigham Young, on the 9th, publicly, in the Tabernacle, and before an immense audience, resigned the position of trustee in trust of the vast Mormon church property and funds. He said he was going so far south that the telegraph would not reach him.

THERE have been so few Liberal Republican triumphs that when the news of one does reach us, it seems that we ought to give it due prominence in our columns. We heard of two such victories the other day in New Jersey, and to make the news more interesting still, they both were achieved in the Legislature of that State. The Hon. James M. Scovel has been identified with the Liberal Republican party from its commencement. Several years ago too he was a member of the Senate of that State, and for one winter at least, he was the presiding officer of that body. One day last week he had occasion to visit the State House on some business of a private character, and having been a member of the Senate he was privileged to go into either House, and if he felt like it, to take a seat on the floor. Mr. Scovel availed himself of all of these "rights," and while sitting demurely in the Assembly, one of the members of that honorable body, in a speech he was making, called Scovel a "perjured man, a forger, and a scoundrel." This was more than our Liberal brother could stand, whereupon he arose to his feet, made his way to the speech-making member, and by a dexterous throwing out of his "right duke," brought the orator to the floor. This was Liberal triumph No 1. A moment or two later a friend of the fallen man—another member of the House—came up and made a pass at Scovel. The latter warded the blow off with one hand, and with the other knocked him down. This was Liberal victory No 2. By this time the "ruby" was flowing around quite freely, and if the Mayor of the city had not come in and induced Scovel to leave the House, it is possible, he would have whipped the whole Legislature. In that event we would have given our rooster an airing in making mention of the glorious news.

OUR Representatives at Washington did two neat things—one for themselves and one for the people—just before adjourning. A day or two before they left the capitol for their homes they passed an act raising their own salaries from $5,000 to $7,500 per year and the increase pay to begin with their term two years before.

At about that same time they repealed an act which allowed county papers to circulate free in the counties where they are published. After the 1st of July 1873, therefore, subscribers to all county papers will be obliged to pay postage on their local newspapers, and "no trust" is a condition of the repealing law besides.

It will be seen from these two acts that while our Representatives took unusual care of No 1, they didn't care a fig for No 2. That is Statesmenship in these days.

THE HON. JOHN H. ORVIS, member of the House at Harrisburg, from Centre county, in a speech delivered in that body on the 8th inst, charges that a defalcation amounting to two millions of dollars has occured in the State finances, within the past six years. The statements and figures by which Mr. Orvis proves the discrepancy between the actual reduction of the state debt and the reduction which would have resulted from the payments claimed to have been made thereon, are taken from the annual messages of the governor and the reports of the auditor general, state treasurer and commissioners of the sinking fund. He, seemingly, makes out a clear case against the financial officers of the Commonwealth, and he has put the matter in so strong a light, that an investigation must follow.

THE startling news from the scene of the Modoc war on the Pacific coast, this morning, will be read with a thrill of horror from one end of the land to the other, and a demand will go up for summary and ample retribution on the savages that no administration can disregard. General Canby, who was so treacherously murdered on Friday last, while holding a peace consultation with the leader of the Modocs, was one of the best officers of the regular army; a man of ripened judgment, who had done the country noble service not only during the civil war, but in the subsequent process of reconstruction. When assassinated he was engaged in a mission of peace and humanity, and this makes the crime of the savages one of the most fearful in all their bloody record. We think the Peace Commissioners will now be sent to the rear and General Phil Sheridan to the front.—Pitts Gazette. April 14.

THE Police system is little less than a farce in this country. In Europe, it matters but little how complicated a robbery is, or how mysteriously a murder may have been committed, the guilty party is readily discovered by the Police and brought to answer for his misdeeds. With us it is quite different and the perpetrators of many of our boldest robberies and fiendish murders are never detected. As illustrations of this we may mention the Nathan murder in New York city a couple of years ago, where an old and wealthy resident of that city was murdered in his house, and although [illegible] were offered for the apprehension of his murderer, no trace of him has yet been obtained. A few weeks ago a prominent man named Goodrich was found, murdered, in his own dwelling, in that same city, and the Police to this day are not able to tell the public whether it was a man or a woman who committed the crime. They seem to be as much in the dark concerning that murder as we are who are hundreds of miles away from where it was perpetrated. Had either of these murders been committed across the water, we have scarcely a doubt but that the murderer of Nathan would have been executed before this time, and the destroyer of Goodrich's life immured within the prison's walls, a week after he had committed the terrible deed. Our Police officers clearly need a lesson or two from their brethern in the old country, touching the art of unravelling crime, and the capture of criminals.

THE Legislature of the State adjourned on the 10th inst, and if the accounts of its expiring hours have been correctly given the members had a "high old time" just before parting. The Lancaster Intelligencer thus reports the orgies:

> The evening before the adjournment witnessed exhibitions of disorder which must bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every decent man in the Commonwealth. A member who had been called to temporary occupancy of the chair by Speaker Elliott was pelted out by a shower of tobacco boxes and other missiles.
> In a disorderly discussion sneers were hurled at such members as had made any pretense at a disposition to reform abuses, and a resolution was offered requesting Senator McClure to deliver a speech before the house upon political reform. The motion was adopted amid shouts of laughter, and Messrs. Brockway, the mover of the resolution, together with Sam Josephs and Bob Tittermary were appointed a committee to wait upon McClure and inform him of the action of the body. The Colonel knew that house too well to be surprised at any act of folly it might commit. Instead of showing indignation at what might very properly have been regarded as an insult, he unhesitatingly accepted the invitation. As his impressive figure passed up the aisle to the chair, which Speaker Elliott vacated for the occasion, the hearts of the roosters must have thumped audibly. In measured tones and with marked emphasis the Senator proceeded to speak as follows:
> "Mr. Speaker and Commoners of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania: I am very happy to meet you this evening. Most of you of Philadelphia were never nominated and but few of you elected; how about you of the rural districts I am unable to say. I am extremely happy to believe in a different state of things hereafter. You have succeeded admirably in your work of creating offices for those of you who can never come back. As to reform, I think the debate in the Senate must have made a deep impression upon the members of the house. I rejoice to hope that after the darkest hour of political demoralization, I may meet your successors here next session, and that better men than yourselves will fill the seats that will then know you no more."

A neater rebuke than this was never administered. Every word of McClure's speech, it seems to us, must have cut to the red, for, with a few honorable exceptions, a more debauched, reckless and intriguing set of men never met to make laws for the people of Pennsylvania. As Col. McClure well said, it is to be hoped that the seats that knew them then will know them no more.

HERE AND THERE.

—An English woman in Paris is about to publish a book containing the details of a doctrine resembling the metempsychosis of the ancients. According to this fair author, the soul released by death wanders about through space for any number of years, until it is ready to be embodied again. The duration of these wanderings depends upon the conduct of the wanderers before death. The more wicked a soul is, the longer it has to travel. The author herself is informed by a "communication" from a former attendant that more than 3,000 years B. C. she was an Abyssinian princess, and a very ugly and disagreeable one too. Another of the believers in this doctrine has represented himself to be John Huss returned to earth. What one is going to be on earth several thousand years hence is an exhilarating conundrum to guess.

—An Albany paper relates the following anecdote. The lady referred to is from Oswego, and holds a clerkship in the War Department: Many years ago Hon. W. H. Seward visited a relative in Western New York, and there met a young lady, also a guest, who kindly volunteered to mend a rent in the young statesman's glove, for which he thanked her kindly and assured her that if ever in his power to do her a favor he would do it kindly. Time took no note of the transaction, but went on as usual. The young lady became a wife, a widow, a teacher, bearing her great misfortune with fortitude and a determination to be self-sustaining. Wearied of teaching, she determined to seek a situation in one of the government offices at Washington. She made known her wishes to Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, reminding him of the fact that she once mended his glove, and that the time for the promised favor had arrived. His response was prompt, and in due time she was placed in a position which she filled most efficiently for more than seven years. What trifling acts may prove of great value to us in after years!

—They are pretty good eaters at the Millersville Normal School in Lancaster county. Professor Edward Brooks, in his last annual report, says: "Of beef alone, not to mention other kinds of meat, there are consumed no less than 52,000 pounds per annum, or about 175 pounds a day; of butter 21,000 pounds a year, or about 80 pounds a day; of potatoes, about 1,200 bushels a year; of eggs, 7,000 dozen a year, (80 dozen or 960 eggs are boiled for a single meal;) of bread, about 75 loaves a day; of apple dumplings, which are often supplied for dinner, 1,200 are required for a single meal, and 80 pies are consumed at a single dinner as dessert. Flour is used at the rate of ten barrels per week, this one article of food costing $3,000 per annum. For cooking and heating, about 600 tons of coal per annum are required: and for lighting the buildings, about 1,850 gallons of kerosene oil. There are about 5,000 pieces washed and ironed a week."

—A remarkable wedding recently took place in Baltimore, Md. The bridegroom was Jesse W. Uppercu, whose name has figured somewhat prominently before the public during the past winter. Nearly a year ago he was arrested on suspicion of having caused the death of his aunt bu[illegible]dence, it was said, pointed him out distinctly as the murderer, and the suspicions which were at first entertained regarding his guilt gradually became strengthened into belief as evidence was accumulated. The prisoner was indicted for murder and put upon trial for his life. The evidence brought out was almost entirely of a circumstantial character, and after a trial of unprecedented length the case was given to the jury, the prevailing belief being that he would be found guilty. The jury consulted together for a long time but were unable to agree upon a verdict and were finally discharged. In February another trial was had, lasting a still greater length of time, and finally resulting in the prisoner's acquittal. All during the two long trials a young lady possessed of unusual attractions and occupying a high social position in Baltimore was observed watching the proceedings day by day, and when the prisoner was acquitted she fainted away in the Court-room. A few days since the lady became Mrs Uppercu, and beside the relatives of the bride and bridegroom at the wedding ceremonies there were present the Judge who had presided at the Court, and the counsel both for the defense and the prosecution.

—Into the arid atmosphere of politics and bread-and-butter sometimes comes a bit of romance of melting sweetness. Of such is the story of two lovers and a remorseless father, which, as it has just been told by a Bostonian, must of course be true. Ten years ago a beautiful young Boston girl was sent to the Vermont hills to arrest, if possible, the indications of approaching consumption. She recovered her health, and meantime inflicted a cureless wound upon the heart of an intelligent and well-educated young farmer's son. Unlike Lady de Vere, she did not scorn his timid affection, but returned it heartily, referring him to her father. That traditionally unromantic personage wouldn't hear of it. "Never-r, never-r shall a base mechanic wed my child!" The young man retired, went west, and made a large fortune, and the young woman married the man prescribed by her father. She went to live in France; her husband died in two years, and, her parents also dying, she remained abroad. The memory of her first romance faded with her as with its object, who, though unmarried was too busy in making money for tender thoughts. Last year his business took him to Europe, and one night found him on a little steamer plying between Marseilles and Leghorn. A storm came up, and a lady, who had risen from her seat on deck to go below, was thrown overboard by a sudden lurch of the vessel. The "base mechanic" jumped after, and though in the dark the steamer drifted away from them, they clutched a providential plank and floated until morning, when they were picked up by another vessel. During that night, in the cold and the darkness, they discovered in each other the loved and lost of earlier years. The old feeling came back in that fearful hour, and on their arrival at Malta they were married. End of the poetry. The rest is prose.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

Correspondence Between Mayor Medill, of Chicago, and President Grant.

NEW YORK, April 10.—The Times of to-morrow prints the following correspondence:

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
CHICAGO, April 1, 1873.

To His Excellency, U. S. Grant, President of the United States:

DEAR SIR—An executive order was promulgated on the 16th of January, 1873, against the holding of State or municipal offices by Federal appointees after the 4th of March, 1873. Under this order it would be illegal for me to continue to hold the office of Commissioner of the Civil Service Board, unless I resign the Mayoralty of Chicago. Not feeling that it would be expedient to do the latter at present, I therefore tender my resignation of the appointment from you of Civil Service Commissioner, and I hereby tender my thanks for the confidence you reposed in me in making such appointment. I also trust that the rules prepared by the Board, and accepted and adopted by you, will not be abandoned, ignored or neglected of enforcement, believing as I do that the application will tend to improve and elevate the civil service, and that they are endorsed by the great mass of the American people.

Very respecfully, yours,
JOSEPH MEDILL.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1873.

DEAR SIR—Upon my return to Washington I find your letter of the 1st inst., resigning the position of Commissioner of the Civil Service Board on account of your inability to hold that position together with your responsible office of Mayor of Chicago. I appreciate your reason, while I regret that the Board will lose your valuable services and in accepting your resignation I beg to thank you for your earnest labors in the cause of civil service reform, and to assure you that the spirit of the rules adopted will be maintained.

Very respectfully yours,
U. S. GRANT.

To Hon. Joseph Medill, Chicago, Ill.

WASHINGTON, April 6.—The letter of resignation of George Wm. Curtiss, is as follows:

WESTVIEW, PAIGHTON. N. Y.
March 18, 1873.

MY DEAR SIR—As the circumstances under which several important appointments have recently been made, seem to me to show an abandonment both of the spirit and the letter of the Civil Service negotiations, I respectfully resign my position as a member of the Advisory Board of the Civil Service. In so doing, I beg to assure you of my warmest wishes and of the continuance of my most earnest efforts for the success of your administration.

Very respectfully and truly yours.
[Signed.] GEO. WM. CURTISS.

The Way They do it in Nebraska.

Charles Wells sold a cow to an old man named Shurty, in Stanton county, Nebraska, and was to receive in payment [illegible] days' labor, which were to be [illegible] at one dollar per day. A [illegible] mortgage was given on the cow [illegible] this understanding. Wells called on Shurty for fifteen days' work, which was duly performed. A quarrel then arose, and Wells took his chattel mortgage to a neighboring lawyer and asked his advice. "Go and seize the cow under your mortgage," said the lawyer.

Wells acted upon this advice, and as he expected some opposition, took along a gun. Shurty saw him coming with his weapon, and also went for his gun. When he next came out of his house, gun in hand, Wells fired and killed him on the spot. Nobody witnessed the tragedy. The next step that is known in the curious and bloody tragedy was when Wells stopped at a cabinet shop in the vicinity, told that he had killed Shurty, and said they had better go up and take the measure for his coffin.

The probate judge of Staton county sat a number of days on the case, Wells having given himself up for that purpose. The result was that Wells was committed to await the action of the grand jury. From this predicament he was lately released by a lawyer who procured a habeas corpus, and finally a discharge, on the ground that no warrant had been issued against his client. And still Wells, though at liberty, don't feel quite satisfied. When our informant left he was hunting the Sheriff, whose name is Sam, and wanting a new investigation. He thinks that he has not been examined enough—Omaha Herald.

POOR LO!

How He Makes Peace.

The Modoc Problem Solved.

Finale of a "Talk."

General Canby and Rev. Dr. Thomas Killed.

Full Particulars of the Massacree.

The Red Skins to be Severely Punished.

THE PEACE POLICY "PLAYED OUT."

LAVA BED, April 11, via UREKA, April 12.—Yesterday afteroon five Indians and four squaws came into our camp and were made presents of clothing and provisions by the Peace Commission, and a message was sent out by the Commissioners asking for a talk this morning at a point about one mile from over the picket line. Later in the evening Bogus Charley came and told the picket that he would take his gun, that he (Charley) did not intend to go back any more. The picket brought him to the tent of General Canby, where Charley left his gun, and remained at the tent of Frank Riddle during the night. This morning Boston Charley came in and told the Commissioners that Captain Jack and five other Indians would meet the Commissioners outside our lines. Boston Charley and Bogus then mounted a horse and started for the Lava Bed. About an hour after their departure General Canby, Dr. Thomas, Mr. A. B. Meacham and Mr. Dyer, with Frank Riddell and his squaw for interpreters, started for the place appointed. The party arrived at the place appointed, and were closely watched by the signal officer, Lieutenant Adams, from the signal station on the hill overlooking our camp. About half an hour after the party had arrived a cry from the signal station had attacked the Peace Commissioners and that an engagement had commenced between the Indians and Col. Mason. In a moment the troops were under arms, and deployed as skirmishers, under command of Col. Greene, and orders were given to "Forward, double quick." Very shortly after Mr. Dyer returned and told us that the Indians had attacked them, and that he thought he was the only one who had escaped, but in a few moments after Riddle and his squaw were seen within the picket line. From him we gather the following account of how the massacre commenced;

Meacham made a short speech to the Indians, followed by General Canby, and then Dr. Thomas. Then Captain Jack made a speech, asking for "Hat creek and Cottonwood," the places now occupied by Fairchild and Davis for a reservation. Mr. Meacham told Jack that it was not possible to give him what he asked. Schonchin told Meacham to say no more; that he (Meacham) had said enough upon that subject, and while Schonchin was speaking, Captain Jack got up and walked behind the others and turned his back, and exclaimed "all ready," drew his pistol and snapped a cap at General Canby. He cocked his pistol again and fired. General Canby fell dead, shot under the right eye. Schonchin then shot Meacham in the shoulder and head, but he is still alive. Boston Charley and another Indian shot and killed Dr. Thomas. Nasty Jim chased Dyer for some distance, but Dyer turned upon him with pistol in hand, and Jim ran. An Indian knocked down Riddle's squaw and took her horse, but Captain Jack made him return it, and then another Indian chased Riddle and shot at him. This last may be taken with a grain of salt.

The troops are now about a mile in the Lava Beds, lying on their arms, and will probably advance to-light under cover of darkness. There are about six hundred troops which can be brought into active service, and I believe they will end the Modoc war. Meacham is not expected to live.

The Financier quits the discussion of monetary topics, on one of its pages to put forth this somewhat dismal utterance: "There will be no reforms in the civil service so long as politics pay as now; and that will always be the case so long as the party rules the people, and a Convention rules the party, and a caucus in States rules the Convention, and a knot of wire-pullers around a table rule the caucus; in other words, so long as a dozen or less of professional manipulators are allowed to name two or three objectionable men for office, and compel the people to say which is the least objectionable. Elections, in this democratic country of representative government, are now not a choice, but a choice of evils; and while this base, tricky and ignoble system lasts, civil-service reform will be the profession and the trick of campaigns. If the people really want it, they must be in earnest about it. Analyze it down to its reality, and there is nothing in all the practical history of the world at once so farcical, so surprising, so outrageous and so melancholy, as the form which passes under the name of general elections in the United States. How long this condition will last depends on how much longer an experience is necessary to thoroughly arouse and anger a generous and patient people.

Schurz Refuses the Back Pay.

Senator Schurz may be added to the list of members of Congres who positively refuse to receive back pay. Mr. Schurz has stated that he regarded the pay of Congressmen as insufficient, and would have been willing to favor a prospective increase, if he had thought it would have the effect to put an end to corruption.

A GREAT CURE

By Inhalation.

A TESTIMONIAL FROM MRS. DOWNING,

Of Wooster, Ohio.

WOOSTER, O., November 11, 1872.

I have been afflicted with Catarrh for over 25 years, and had consulted different physicians, whose prescriptions relieved me but little, if any at all. I tried some catarrh remedies, which proved worse than useless, and I believe they were the cause of the disease going to my lungs and heart.

Night sweats, hectic fever, loss of appetite, bleeding from the lungs, and other symptoms of Consumption appeared, and I became much discouraged, and so weak I could scarcely sit up.

In this condition I applied to Dr. Hunter, scarcely hoping to obtain any relief. I am thankful to say that from the day I commenced the use of his Inhalations and other treatment, I have steadily improved, until I feel that I have recovered substantial health.

I consider that my recovery is truly remarkable, and as such it is looked upon by my friends and neighbors. I now enjoy better health than I have for years, and can perform my household duties with perfect ease.

I trust by the favor of God, and the kind and skillful treatment of Dr. Hunter, I may be restored to perfect health.

I would say to the many afflicted as I have been, go to Dr. Hunter at once, with your minds fully made up to follow his rules and directions, and you will find a physician and friend in whose hands you need not fear to trust your health.

ELIZABETH DOWNING.

Mrs. Downing is the wife of Samuel P. Downing, a brother of Judge Downing, of Wooster, Ohio, and will cheerfully answer all inquiries made, either personally or by letter.

WHAT IS INHALATION?

It is the method of treating diseases of the nasal cavities, Throat and Lungs, by BREATHING into them the vapor of medicines, from an Inhaling Instrument.

Dr Hunter has devoted many years to this specialty, and publishes testimonials from some of the most eminent journalists, ministers, and other persons in this country. Send for a pamphlet containing these.

If you are afflicted with Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, or Catarrh, instead of wasting time and money with general practitioners and patent medicines, go, or send an intelligent statement of your case to Dr. Hunter, who has spent a life-time treating these diseases, and receive such treatment as the particular nature, stage and symptoms of your disease requires. An opinion costs you nothing, and his fees for treatment are low.

Uncomplimentary, But More Truthful Than Poetical.—A Canadian was uncomplimentary enough to say recently to a correspondent of a Cincinnati paper: "Right now we are freer than you are, and have less taxes to pay. You are taxed to death in your rotten Republic, and don't know it. Your Congressmen and officials at Washington steal more than it takes to run our whole Government in Canada. Do you suppose we outside people knowing these things as we do want to pin our destinies to such a Government? The theory of yours is good enough, I know, but corruption and imbecility have corroded it until what you call the best Government the world ever saw has become the worst one."

Fall Stock of Trimmings and Notions, at the Cheap Store of Will A. Smith, Rochester. apr16-2w

A Singular Development.—A singular and romantic development has come to light since the loss of the Atlantic on the coast of New Foundland. In caring for the dead, taken from the sunken ship, a common sailor, and one whose life was sacrificed in efforts to save others, was a young woman about twenty or twenty-five years of age. Her sex was not known until the body was washed ashore and the rude clothing removed preparatory for burial. She had served as a common sailor for three voyages, and was a favorite shipmate with all. She is described as having fewer of the vices incident to a sailor's life than is usual, but she was, nevertheless, as jolly an old tar as any of them. One of the survivors of the crew in speaking of her remarked, "I didn't know Bill was a woman. He used to take his liquor as regular as any of us, and was always begging and stealing tobacco. He was a good fellow, though, and I'm sorry he was a woman." The most singular part of the whole story is that the woman was an American, and was about the only one of that nationality belonging to the crew. Who she was and where she came from, and her motive for leading such a strange life of hardship, never was and never will be fully known.

New Millinery Goods just received at the Cheap Store of Will A. Smith, Rochester. apr16-2w

The Latest Swindle.—Certain sanctimonious charlitans would fain persuade the world that diffusive stimulants have no medicinal value, and that detestible slops, composed of griping acids and drasting purgatives, are better tonics than the finest vegitable ingredients combined with the purest and mellowest products of the still. But this sort of thing won't go down. The stomach of our common sense rejects it, as the physical stomach of every man with an undepraved palate rejects, with loathing and abhorrence, the nauseous abominations, "free from alcohol," which Humbugs are trying to thrust down the throats of Temperance Invalids under the pretence that the filth will do them good? It is not likely that while Plantation Bitters, the Standard Tonic of America, is anywhere accessible, such sickening frauds can make much headway, but it is as well to put the public on their guard against them.

Just Received.—A large lot of new Dress Goods, Silk Scarfs, Collar Rouging, White Goods, Prints, &c, &c., which will be sold at the lowest prices, at Hibbard's, Rochester. apr9-2w

Consumption—Life, and Love.—It is an affair of duty, as well as of life and love, to point the Chronic invalid to a place or Person where he can be cured. It is the province of a newspaper to do so, and we do so the more readily for Dr. Keyser's Lung Cure, because we know of its virtues. We know of thousands who, by it, and Dr. Keyser, together, have been the recipients of its benefits, and walk with steady tread the paths of life, in health, who were fast hastening down its declivities to untimely graves. The cure of Consumption is made easy by Dr. Keyser, whose name should stand side by side with the heroes in medicine—those who have enriched the world by their discoveries in science. An essay free by mail.

Office, 167 Liberty street, Pittsburgh. Price of Lung Cure, $1.50 per bottle, or $7.50 per half dozen.

apr9-2w M. L. KNIGHT, Co. Sup't.

A number of persons have called on us during the past week, to inquire in regard to the "New Party" movement. The matter has not as yet sufficiently developed to take definite shape. We shall know more about it in the future. If it is not an improvement, the less of it the better. If it gives good promise of correcting some abuses which have disgusted good men with politics, the people will give it such countenance as will make some old stagers tremble. There is certainly great need of something to purify the politics of the State and nation, and a little extended even to Lawrence county might not be without good results. So far as our own county is concerned, the remedy is in the hands of the people, if they will use it. There is no necessity for forming a new party. If the people will be honest themselves, and give up personal preferences, and some of them what they consider personal prospects, and see to it that none but honest, capable and efficient men are nominated, a marked improvement will be seen at once. The truth is, the public conscience has been asleep or under the influence of a powerful opiate, and the state of dishonesty and corruption reached in high places, is the natural and logical result of this protracted snooze. Is it time to awake? If the glaring rascalities developed in 1873 go unrebuked, what will be the limit in the future? Remember, you cannot expect to be honestly represented, if you are not honest yourselves. Do not expect reform from professional politicians and office-seekers. They are only waiting to see how you bear this, to make preparations for larger grabs. Nothing can rebuke them but the people, and nothing but the people can furnish them encouragement.—New Castle Courant.

New Goods, New Styles, and Great Bargains.—Mr. William Reich in Bridgewater has just received his Spring and Summer stock of cloths cassimeres, vesaings &c., &c., and feels assured that a better assortment can not be found in this country. His workmen are careful, experienced, and competent, and all clothing made at his establishment will be found not only to wear well but to fit well in addition. Prices moderate. Give him a call before getting your spring suits. mar19-4w

The Pittsburgh Commercial of Tuesday last says: Shortly before five o'clock yesterday a steamboat disaster occurred on the Ohio, at the head of Glass House Ripple and near Brunot's Island, which will result, probably, in the total destruction of the New State, a freight and passenger steamer plying between this city and Wheeling. The New State left the Pittsburgh wharf at a quarter after four o'clock with a full cargo of dry goods, iron, glass, &c., and a considerable number of passengers, about twenty-five of them being woman and children. The accident occurred at about 4:35 by collision with the Eagle, a towboat, which was on its way to this city. The river is high, and it was with difficulty that the boats could be managed, while the place of meeting was an unfortunate one. The fault or blame, if any there was, cannot at this time be placed, but an investigation will immediately follow. The Eagle struck the New State on the starboard bow, knocking the bow off and staving in the hull. The latter sank immediately, while the towboat, which was without weight upon it, seemed to be entirely uninjured, except the breaking of the gallows frame and the jackstaff. The captain of the Eagle at once took the passengers from the unfortunate vessel and brought them to the city, giving them every attention. No person was at all injured by the accident.

It is believed that the New State will be a total wreck, but much of the freight will be recovered from her decks. The second mate and a watchman were left on board, with lights, to warn other craft from the danger, the sunken boat being immediately in the channel and the river rising. When she was left by the Eagle the water was within two feet of the cabin and rising. The New State was owned by Messrs. C. Booth & Co., of Wheeling, and commanded by Capt. Dillon. The vessel and cargo are estimated to have been worth between $25,000 and $30,000, but no information as to insurance could be obtained. The Eagle is owned by Capt. Thomas Harper.

Fairly Beaten.—In our last we announced the fact that Isaac Mitchell, John Shoup and Edward Depoe of Washington township, had had 23 cases of measles in their three families and bantered all aspiring competitors to beat it if they could. On Monday last we were told upon indubitable authority that Messrs. Fred. Fenner of Morris, and John Ross and George Estle, esq., of Washington, had 29 cases in their three families—7 in Estle's, 9 in Ross's and 13 in Fenner's. In addition to this, Mr. Estle says if it had been put off a few weeks, he might have had another case. Now, we don't believe this can be beaten a single measle by any other three families in the District. Try it, if you dare!—Waynesburg Messenger.

Our regular size bottles 75 cents. In all cases money will be promply returned if perfect satisfaction is not given. Two doses will relieve any case. Try it. nov29-1y

How Warm Snow Is.—Last fall Mr. Spencer, who has a farm near Elk Rapids, Mich., filled a pit in his field with potatoes, covering them only with boards and potato tops. During the night snow fell, and he was unable to cover them with earth, and they remained in this condition until last week, when the covering of snow, potato tops, and boards were removed, and the potatoes found to be entirely untouched by the frost. Perhaps the most remarkable fact connected with this is that a coffee pot half full of water, which was left standing on the ground near the potato pit, and was covered with only snow to the depth of about one foot, was found to be as free from ice as when placed there last fall.

The Harrisburg correspondent of the Philadelphia Sunday Times says: Hon. M. S. Quay has filled the office of Secretary of the Commonwealth to the entire satisfaction of the "boys." As the furniture in the Secretary's office is somewhat dilapidated, having been purchased two years ago, Mr. Quay asked for an appropriation of one thousand dollars to refurnish his office. The Senate in its liberality gave him two thousand dollars. Mr. Quay is about to make Harrisburg his permanent home; having recently purchased a residence at the capitol, his family will soon remove there.

Important Postal Changes.—A recent number of the United States Postal Guide, contains the latest rulings of the Post Office Department. The following important and interesting facts concerning the changes in the postal laws resulting from the legislation of the Forty-second Congress, will be of interest

I. All laws and parts of laws permitting the transmission by mail of any free matter whatsoever are repealed from and after June 30th, 1873. Therefore,

II. After that date "exchanges" and weekly newspapers circulated within the county where published will be subject to the regular rates of postage. [Heretofore these have been on the "free" list.

III. Congress passed no law reducing the rate of letter postage. [There is an erroneous idea that the rate of letter postage, on and after July 1, has been reduced to two cents for each one-half ounce or fraction thereof.]

IV. Prepayment on newspapers and periodicals on and after July 1 is not compulsory, optional, as heretofore. The rates are the same whether paid or not.

V. The act of January 9, 1873, requires that all matter of the third class (papers and periodicals not sent regularly; also, pamphlets, books, packages of samples, merchandise, seeds, &c,) must be prepaid at the office of mailing; otherwise the same shall not be forwarded; but should the same be forwarded without such prepayment double the prepaid rate must be collected on delivery. Compulsory prepayment applies only to the third-class matter.

VI. Letters having one full rate (three cents) prepaid must be forwarded as heretofore, and shall be charged only with the actual balance not prepaid.—By a decision of the Postmaster General last year such letters were subject to double the amount unpaid. This decision was not sustained by the Attorney-General, who was appealed to.

The Beaver County Temperance Union, will meet at the M. E. Church, Beaver Falls, on Friday, April 22d, 1873, at 10 o'clock a. m. The annual election of officers and managers will be held and arrangements made for a perfect organization of the boroughs and townships in Local Unions. In view of the expressed opinion of the people at the late election, on the question of prohibition, it becomes necessary we see to it that no illegal traffic is carried on, and in view of the probable action of the constitutional convention submitting the question of prohibition in the new constitution at the election this fall, every arrangement should be made to educate public sentiment, and bring out the full strength of the friends of order and sobriety at that time. While this is a regular meeting of the Union, all persons friendly to the cause of temperance are cordially invited to meet with us and aid us with their presence. The friends at Beaver Falls will provide entertainment for all who may come from a distance. Come friends and let us counsel together upon this vital subject.

Sassafras Tea, with a little maple sugar in it, will, in a short time, now, be the strongest beverage allowed in this county. We can congratulate ourselves, however, on the fact, that if it is a little weak, it is neither dangerous, expensive, nor full of fight.

BEAUTIFUL POETRY.

It is seldom we find afloat upon the great sea of literature, a poetic effusion of such rare beauty, tenderness, and pathos as the following, said to be written by a Miss Priest, of Hinsdale, N. H. Such lines should be preserved in song; and we would suggest that some composer will cause them to vibrate by setting them to the witching melody of music.

BY REQUEST.

OVER THE RIVER.

Over the River they beckon to me,
Loved ones who've crossed to the other side,
The gleams of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are lost in the dashing tide.
There's one with ringlets of sunny gold,
And eyes the reflection of heaven's own blue.
He crossed in the twilight grey and cold,
And the pale mist hid him from mortal view.
We saw not the angels who met him there,
The gates of the city we could not see,
Over the river, over the river,
My brother stands waiting to welcome me.

Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another, the household pet,
Her brown curls waved in the gentle gale—
Darling Minnie! I see her yet.
She crossed on her bosom her gentle hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark;
We felt it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark.
We know she is safe on the further side—
Where all the ransomed and angels be;
Over the river, the mystic river,
My childhood's idol is waiting for me.

For none return from those quiet shores,
Who cross with the boatman cold and pale;
We hear the dip of the golden oars,
And catch a gleam of the snowy sail;
Lo! they have passed from our yearning hearts,
They cross the stream and are gone for aye.
We may not sunder the veil apart
That hides from our vision the gates of day,
We only know that their barks no more
May sail with us o'er life's stormy sea;
Yet somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore,
They watch, and beckon, and wait for me.

And I sit and think when the sunset's gold
Is flushing river, and hill, and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold
And list to the sound of the boatman's oar;
I shall watch for a gleam of the flapping sail,
I shall hear the boat as it gains the strand,
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale,
To the better shore of the spirit land.
I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully sweet will the meeting be,
When over the river, the peaceful river,
The Angels of Death shall carry me.

BEAVER COUNTY JAIL,
April 11, 1873.

Editor of The Beaver Argus:

DEAR SIR:—In order that the world may know something concerning the case Martha Witherow & Commonwealth vs. C. Uselton, the case is this: On Saturday, 25th January, 1873, I went to the house of James T. Nevill—who lived in part of my house—for some rent due me, got none, left, went to the Witherow door, who lived in part of the same house of Nevill, a single board partition between the two families, opened the door of Witherow's house, asked if Noble—that is her husband—was in, she said no, he would be in in a few minutes; that he was just out some place. I told her I was in a hurry, that I was going to Mr. J. Frenches; that we wanted to see about moving Monday or Tuesday; told her that Noble owed me some rent, to tell him to be sure and bring it down to me to-night as I wanted it. Did not go in the house, stood on the upper step, pulled the door shut, went away. Went to Frenches, was not back that day, as Mrs. Jessie Campbell—the witness—swore that she saw me go out of the Nevill door, go to Witherow's door, did not go in, was not there—she thought—more than two minutes. Saw me go away; saw me for some distance in leaving the Witherow house, who swore exactly true. A young lady came in the Nevill shop or house, who swore that I was in Nevill's when she went in. She staid there until the report came in from Witherow's into Nevill's. She heard no talking in the Witherow house, nor heard no noise whatever. Mrs. Witherow swore that I was but once at her house that day in contradiction. Some Commonwealth witnesses swore to trees, shrubery, &c., being in the way between Mrs. Campbell's and Witherow's house; but several of the best citizens of Industry and country have examined, and say they can see clearly and can see a cat at the door of Witherow's from the Campbell house some swore that they could see a man at the door, but could not see the door, swore very cautiously, &c. It was from ten to twelve o'clock in the day, but the most honorable body of the court, finding part of the case against me, that is of common assault, the jury disagreeing on that case alone, brought down the verdict, the court, being very desirous of discretion, sentenced me to one hundred dollars fine, costs of prosecution and three months in county jail, in which place I am well used—just as good as if at home, have everything I could wish but work, have none of that, am getting fat, plenty of the best of good grub, nothing to do; but, my good friends at Industry and vicinity got up a petition for my pardon to his Excellency, the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with, I believe, some hundreds of names. I did not see it when sent away, but those, my friends, who have for the last six or seven years endeavored to destroy me by every way conceivable, have not only thought to destroy me, but my helpless girl of the age of sixteen years, who never walked, never sat alone, never fed herself by any strength of her own, who never done any one on this earth any harm in all her life, and wishes all well; but, thanks be to God, who has kept those enemies from harming us in the way they have been desirous of doing, they knowing I am her only earthly support in this world.

—"Old John Brown" used to keep things straight in the vicinity of Osage Mission. Some person like him, it would seem from the above, should be operating in that vicinity now. A little hanging would no doubt be about as effective in 1873 as it was in 1856.

Briceland, the man who was committed of the murder of John Allingham in Washington county a short time ago, made an effort through his attorneys, last week, to attain a new trial. The motion for a new trial was argued by Crumaine and Patterson for, and district Attorney Baird against. On Friday morning the court overruled the application, and Briceland was sentenced to be hanged. He exhibited wonderful nerve, and protested that "This was a put up job on me. I was lying asleep in bed when the murder was committed." The case will likely go to the Supreme Court.

A School Room for the Heathen Chinee.—The Beaver Falls cutlery company, on last Friday, purchased the store room belonging to J. L. B. Dawson of that place, to be used in the future, as a school room for the "heathen Chinee." Teachers will be provided, and if these "children of the sun" learn our language, customs and religion as rapidly as they have acquired the art of making knives, it will not be long until they get away ahead of some of those who think they are too stupid and unclean to touch our soil. To educate and christianize the Chinese who are now at Beaver Falls, and send them to China after being here four years, will accomplish more in the way of "converting the heathen" than all our county has ever done in that particular. No reflecting person can or will deny this.

"The Last Loaf."—Our young friends in Rochester—and some that are not so young either—will, on next Friday evening, present the popular temperance drama entitled "The Last Loaf" in the town hall of that place. The performance of the evening, will conclude with the laughable farce, entitled "The Rough Diamond." The proceeds are to be applied to aid in fitting a hall for the Temple of Honor. The plays are interesting and amusing, and judging from the cast of characters, we have no doubt but that a very enjoyable evening can be passed by attending.

Carolina Johnson, a colored man living in Bridgewater, this county, is about thirty one years of age. He was born in South Carolina, and was a slave until the war made him free. He was owned by General Wade Hampton, and while the master was away commanding armies and fighting against the Union, Johnson skipped for freedom, and came here. This took place in 1862. He has been in the employ of Capt. J. V. McDonald almost ever since he reached the north, in the capacity of fireman, on one or another of the numerous steamboats owned by Mr. M. He is a steady man, and so far as integrity and ability are concerned, is far above many of his race in this vicinity. He represents General Hampton as being very wealthy before the war—owning two immense plantations—one in south Carolina, and the other in Mississippi, and both well stocked with slaves. He is under the impression that his old master's real estate is still intact, but the slaves, where are they? Echo answers where. Mr. Johnson has never met General Hampton since he left his Mississippi plantation in 1862, although frequently passing and re-passing the fields in which he used to pick cotton as the chattel of another man. He speaks kindly, however, of the Hampton family, and awards them credit for treating their slaves humanely during the days when one man could own another and be protected in the ownership by the law of the land.

Hon. Daniel Agnew, who has been absent nearly all winter, attending to his duties as one of the Supreme Judges of this State, returned home last week, looking as well as usual. The session of the Court was held in Philadelphia.

If any of our readers are so unfortunate as to need a tombstone or a monument for a departed relative or friend, they will find at the marble shop of Mr. W. H. Marshall, of Rochester, what they want. He has an excellent quality of American and Italian marble on hand, and as he employs none but the best of workmen, his work is of the very best quality. Prices quite moderate.

Pass Him Around.—We suppose that other offices have been visited by occasional "tramps." So has this one, and as a general thing when a tramp "jour" calls on us, when he is sober enough, we will aid him if possible. But we warn our brethren of the press against one, Jack Nash, alias "cheeky." We gave him a "sit" and he could have had it a month had he wished to; but he got to drinking and "put the cap sheaf on" by "going through" our money-drawer, and stealing the "stick" he had been using. We recovered the "stick" but let the theif go as we thought it useless to put the county to the expense of keeping him in jail. Said Nash is a young man, rather heavy set, wears brown side whiskers, round plush cap, has lost the big toe of his left foot, causing him to walk lame. Look out for him.—Canton Democrat, 27th inst.

That same laddie was in our office Friday last; we gave him enough money to take him beyond the limits of our county, east, and are now sorry we did not send him away farther. We had not seen the above item until too late, or we should have asked him if he knew Archie McGregor of Canton.—Salem Republican.

Wish you had sent him a little further east than Wellsville Bro. Rukenbrod. "Cheeky" worked half a day for us last week, and we gave him his dinner and a dollar to take him to Steubenville. We did not miss any "sticks" after his departure, but one of our compositors missed two dollars from the pocket of his vest, which had been hanging near the case where Nash had been working. —Wellsville Union.

"Cheeky" came to Beaver in his peringrinations, and so worked upon our sympathies in relating the history of the loss of the aforesaid "big toe of his left foot," that all hands were induced to divide assets with him. We guess, however, that he didn't steal anything here.

Leg Broken.—On last Sabbath day a women named Margaret Morrison, fell, at the house of Rev. F. Mustard, in Independence township, and broke her leg. The woman has been an inmate of the County Home for some time past, and how she got away from there and to the vicinity of Boktown, we have not learned. Mr. Mustard is taking care of the woman for the time being. She is quite aged. We presume, the authorities or guardians of the poor, as soon as they learn where she is, will remove her to the county home.

A rural poet thus breaks forth: "Oh, the snore, the beautiful snore, filling her chamber from ceiling to floor! Over the coverlet, under the sheet, from her wee dimpled chin to her pretty feet! Now risking aloft like a bee in June; now sunk to the wail of a crack-bassoon! Now, flute like, subsiding, then rising again, is the beautiful snore of Elizabeth Jane!"

A newspaper correspondent calls attention to the great convenience that would follow if farmers would generally have their names painted on gates at the entrance to their premises. Strangers often have much difficulty in finding the residences of persons of whom they are in search, which would be obviated by this course. The name may be neatly painted on a slip of tin six or eight inches long, and two inches wide, which could be easily tacked on the gate!

The Press of this place in last week's edition publishes the decision of the asst. Superintendent of Public Schools of Pa. in relation to the percentage the law allows a Treasurer of a School board for all money received by them for School purposes, up to the time the board meets (See School laws, page 110) to elect a Collector. If this is an important decision it only means that a mast of wise men have been in darkness in the clear light of the noon day sun up to the time it was made. If any person in this county (extend the limits wide as you please) can arrive at any other conclusion, or decide in any other words than the Superintendent publishes, after reading the "Duty of Treasurer" page 36 then read Duty of Treasurer in collecting Taxes, page 109 110 and 111 School laws, I am free to say that I am a fit subject for Dixmont. ROCHESTER, PA., April 14, 1873.

EDITOR ARGUS:—We often, about this time of year, hear the question asked, how does any one know when Easter Sunday comes, &c? The following, we believe, is the correct solution: Easter (the festival commemorative of Christ's resurrection) is the first Sunday after the full moon, which happens upon or next after March 21; and if the full moon happen on a sunday, Easter is the sunday after. This arrangement was decreed by the council of Nice, A. D., 325; and has remained unchanged. Easter may occur as early as March 22, or as late as April 25. This year the first full moon after March 21, was April 12, and the day following being Sunday, Easter occurred April 13.

I. C. H.

To the Memory of S. P. Reed, Who Died March 10, 1873.

All his toils on earth were over,
When he calmly fell asleep;
With his dearest friends around him,
Friends whose grief was sad and deep.

In this world of sin and sorrow,
His bright face we'll see no more;
And our hearts are aching, bleeding
For our brother gone before.

Oh! we little thought our darling
Would be called from us so soon;
But to Heaven God has called him,
and his home is veiled in gloom.

He is not lost to those who loved him,
But has only crossed before
That dark River, all must cross it
Ere we reach that other shore.

While his friends on earth are praying
That they too a heaven may gain;
Could we from that world of beauty,
Call him back to earth again?

While we bow in sweet submission
To the Father, to the Son,
Though our loss is sad and grievous,
We can say, "Thy will be done."

SELECT MISCELLANY.

LESSON FROM THE GALLOWS.

A Sketch for Parents.

"Irenæus," in the New York Observer of this week writes:

On Friday last, a young man suffered death on the gallows in this city. His story is a sad one, full of interest and warning to parents and children. He was a child of Christian parents, a Sunday school boy, and his education at a boarding school in the country was enough to qualify him for success and usefulness.

He is spoken of by those who knew him well as a boy of good disposition, uncommonly mild and amiable. Fond of the society of young fellows, and of a gay and frolicsome turn, he was easily led into bad company. He was put into business, but he would not stick to it, being led away by his associates who were idle and profligate. He became wild, reckless, and lawless. He refused to submit to parental authority, and found congenial companionship in a lower grade of people than he had been accustomed to meet in his father's house.

It is not proper to invade the sacred precincts of the domestic circle, and inquire into the circumstances that led to a fatal mistake in parental treatment of a wayward son. I will allude to nothing which has not been publicly stated in the newspapers, and never denied.

His wild and extravagant habits led to his being cast off by his father, who, when he could no longer restrain him from his evil courses, refused him protection of his home, and left him to the chances of life, in the dangerous vortex of this great city. His downward course was more rapid, for it is with men as with things, that falling bodies sink with unformly accelerated velocity. When this boy began to drink intoxicating liquors with his companions, is not known. But when he became so reduced in his circumstances as to take a situation as a conductor on a street car, he had formed such bad habits that he did not hold it long. He was out of business, even as a car conductor, when riding in one of the cars, and inflamed with rum, he insulted women, and murdered their innocent protector. I need not recite the facts so often repeated; how he was rebuked for his insult; how he brooded over the rebuke, muttered vengeance, selected a fitting weapon, with the use of which he was familiar, and smote his unsuspecting victim in the dark on the head, and slew him. For this murder he was tried and convicted. The case was carried up through all the courts, and the just sentence maintained by the wisest and best judicial minds. The Governor of the State, in whom resides the power to pardon or to commute the sentence of death to that of imprisonment, was then appealed to, and a pressure was brought to bear upon him such as no Governor ever before experienced. Friends who had forsaken the young man when he might have been, perhaps, restrained and saved, now strove to deliver themselves from the disgrace of his shameful death, and all that eloquence, ingenuity, and money could do was done to rescue him. Intense sympathy was excited. A whole city was moved with pity for the young man and his afflicted friends. His wife, true to him who had been so false to her and their children, was a mute appeal to the heart of the whole community. But the majesty of justice was greater than all. There was no possible ground on which to base a successful plea for the poor, wretched youth, condemned to die. Of the scenes that followed when the last hope was quenched I will not write. It was cruel to delude him with the vain expectation that he might be saved through the mercy of the Governor, for it made the anguish of the last week of his life only the more bitter when despair followed the blight of that hope.

But there are lessons for parents and children in this terrible tragedy. The ruin of this young man was due to the influence of bad company, intoxicating drink and parental unfaithfulness. Young people are greatly exposed in city and country to the corrupting influence of evil associations, and they are to be guarded from the danger by judicious counsel, by decided authority, and by making home attractive. It is not every parent who has wisdom and tact to guide well a household. But when children show a tendency to seek associations among the wild dissolute, parents ought to rouse themselves to make some compensation for what they have already lost, by failing to entertain and instruct their children at home. The father tired with business comes home to rest, and thinks it enough that he has worked all day for his family. But young people will be amused. They will meet. In every city and village there are ways and means of furnishing rational and delightful amusements to young people, which they relish none the less for being taught the law of God at the fireside. To mingle wisely and well the sobriety and power of religious culture with the fun and frolic of cheerful family and social life, may not be an easy art, but the failure to do it has sent many and many a boy to the bad. There is nothing in the Bible, the Creed, or the Catechism to discourage amusement in its season and if young people cannot have it with the company or consent of their parents, they will have it on the sly, and to do anything on the sly is to be in league with the devil.

Just as I was emerging from my teens I was invited to join a party of young people for an evening sleigh-ride. Not being inperfect health, I feard my father would object, and concealed my intention; and when the evening came, I left the house quietly to join the party. I had gone but a few steps before his trumpet voice called to me as I was hastening down the street, and I returned with fear that my evening pleasure wos over.

"Where are you going?" he asked me.

Mindful of the hatchet and cherry tree I said, "To meet a number of the young folks and go on a sleigh-ride."

"Have you money enough to pay your share of the expenses!"

"I have some, but perhaps I had better have a little more to make a sure thing of it." And he handed me the money which I thanked him for and hurried away again, a thousand times more thankful for such a father, than for the money or sleigh-ride. I told the story to the company at supper, and they voted a model parent!

In the case of this young man who died for murder last Friday, the fatal mistake of the father was casting off the son; leaving him to himself; giving him up; refusing him the refuge of home and the shelter of a father's arm. Our heavenly Father never does so by us. We are wayward, wicked, ungrateful, rebellious, profligate. But while we are a great way off he has compassion on us. There is no crime so great as to justify a parent in disowning a child. The son may become a drunkard, and that is the most hopeless of all the failures to which humanity is exposed. But a drunkard is not altogether lost. And the cases are so rare as to be almost unknown where children have gone into vice or ruin, unless some defect in parental culture paved the way.

Honor to parents is the virtue that has promise of long life and prosperity. And disobedience of parents, neglect of their counsels, and rebellion against their authority make victims for the gallows.

When I was wandering in the Holy Land, I noticed near the towns, a valley or hole into which the carcases of beasts were thrown, and there dogs and birds of prey devoured them. And then I knew the meaning of that terrible prophecy:

"The eye that mocketh at his father and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out and the young eagles shall eat it." The child who begins his career by despising parental restraints will grow up a bad man, break all law, come to a sad end, and be cast out as executed criminals were, into the valley of the slain, and there the birds of prey would feed on him. And so have I seen in my own country, that the food of the gallows is furnished by lawless, disobedient, profligate sons. God set the world in families, and life is blessed or cursed, as the sacred relation is honored or despised.

CHINESE NEW YEAR.

At twelve o'clock last night the sixth year of the cycle of Luhoi ended and the seventh year began. In other words, the Chinese New Year commenced at the hour specified. For weeks past our Celestial neighbors have been preparing for the feast which all solvent Chinamen set before their friends on every Shem Neen (New Year's). Every man among them, who possibly could do so, has paid his indebtedness and prepared his affairs for the beginning of the new year. To use their own phrase, they have made a general "pulling up of the shoe at the heel." Houses, furniture, stores, clothing, and all utensils have heen cleaned and renovated, and the Joss-house decorated with unusual splendor. Little finely-gilt strips, marked "Chut yop ping own" (may those passing in and out have peace), are tacked over the entrances to dwellings; and sometimes a red cloth, bearing the words "Quong-he" (Happy New Year) or "Fa Chow" (much profit) are suspended over doors. Since twelve o'clock last night, when Neen Nan (New Year's Eve) ceased, the mongolians have been feasting and making calls. In all "open" houses to-day will be found little circular tables, laden with sweetmeats and delicacies—dried ducks, pressed flat, and brought all the way from China; eggs kept fresh by coating the shells with mud; dried and pickled sea-snails, edible swallow-nest soup, yellow curd cakes, crystallized melon rind, melon seeds, betel nut wrapped for chewing, sugared cocoanut dried in thin peels, sugared lemons, ice cheese, nummalows (oranges as large as cocoanuts), ben doy (little fancy cakes), pickled camel's feet, various specimens of "rodentia," and other dainties too numerous to mention.

In the house of the wealthier class of merchants two tables are usually set—one for whites and one for Chinese. On the barbarian's table is placed game, fine pastries, and costly wines, in a profusion that would astonish epicures of ordinary means. The wealthier class of Chinese are aristocratic in their manner and very exacting of deference from their inferiors. The young men do most of the calling during the first day of the holiday, visiting their equals and superiors, regardless of age. They are very particular not to call on an inferior. The old men generally are "at home" during the first few days. Afterward they sally forth and make sedate, stately calls upon their equals and superiors of the same age or older than themselves, being very careful never to call on persons inferior or younger than themselves. Every caller leaves his card, bearing his name, business, and residence. It is written on a fancy red strip of paper. As soon as the party visited receives the caller's card, he shakes his own hand and says: "Dah sing? Quong-he. Fachoy" (How are you? Happy New Year. Good luck and much profit.) The caller shakes his own hands and repeats the same verbal salutation. The host then puts a little paste on one end of the card, sticks it in some conspicious place on the wall, where he can constantly see it and be reminded of it, and then invites the visitor to take refreshments.

All classes spend as much as they can afford and make as great a display as possible. Their New Year lasts just as long as they can afford to keek it up. In China it is sometimes prolonged three weeks; but in other countries where Chinese are found it lasts only a few days, or a week at furthest. The festivals of the Spring, Rain, and Water follow close upon the completion of the New Year, and occupy one day each. The names of all Chinamen who failed to pay their debts before the beginning of New Year are collected in one list and distributed among the merchants. They are all marked with a black spot in the account-books, and during the whole year refused credit, although they may be perfectly solvent. They are also denied permission to call upon any merchant or creditor during the holidays that may be held during the year. If they pay off their debts within the year, they are reinstated in favor on the next New Year. At the "Hong Fer Low" (Fragrant Flower Chamber) and at the "Woa Shin Lan." (Assembly Room of the Genii)—both high-toned Chinese restaurants, on Dupont street—extra care has been taken; renovated, cleaned, painted, and decorated throughout, and queer plants with glass eyes in them, trimmed to represent tigers, storks, cranes, etc., are placed around the tinsel and lantern-ornamented balcony. Every window is full of Shoi Sheen Fah New Year Chinese tulip or "Water Genii Flower"), and a kind of lemon resembling a human hand, and from that fact called Fut Suh (the Buddhist's hand), is hung from strings pendant from the ceiling.

Since early morn the Joss-houses have been crowded by votaries eager to worship Shong Ti, God of the Imperial Deep Blue Heavens; To De Poosat, God of Earth; Tsoi Shen, God of Wealth; Tung Nock, God of the Eastern of the Five Great Peaks; Hi Coong Nam, Goddess of Sailors, Wi Tau, God of Medicine; Non Hol ti Chee, God of the Southern Sea; Teen Han, Queen of Heaven; Kum Fay, Golden Flower Goddess, or some other favorite divinity. The donations are larger during New Year's than at any other time, and the fronts of the Joss-houses will soon be covered with little red strips of paper, bearing the names of donors and the amounts contributed. Throughout the holiday—which, owing to steamer or collection day, will be a short one—strange, wild cries will be heard from all the lodging houses and restaurants. These come from parties who are playing "Chai Moy," the finger-game. Two men each thrust out their right hands at once with a part of their fingers closed, at the same time yelling out at the top of their voices the number of open fingers supposed to be held out to the other. The player who guesses wrong has to drink a small cup of tea at his own expense. The Chinese will not work during the New Year holidays, and hundreds of household matrons, who are suffering great annoyance by the temporary desertion of their Asiatic domestics, are loud in their denunciation of the heaten practice. But it avails them naught. Every dog will have his day, and John Chinamen insists on having his.—San Francisco Chronicle.

THE Philadelphia Press thus retracts its statement that Senator Scott had drawn his back pay due him under the provisions of the new salary bill:

> We have sincerely to regret the statement made in these columns several days ago that Hon. John Scott, United States Senator from Pennsylvania, received the extra back pay voted to themselves by the members of both Houses of the last Congress. Senator Scott voted against the proposition, and has not received the money. Senator Cameron voted for the proposition, and pocketed the money. We make this correction the more cheerfully as Mr. Scott evidently believes that the charge against him was published in view of our knowledge of the facts, and with a desire to do him harm. Such a purpose would have been absurd in the face of the world, even if we had had any motive to entertain any feelings towards Mr. Scott but those of respect. We have never questioned his integrity or his ability.

A Text for Boys.

A man of very pleasing address, but very dishonest in his practice, once said to an honorable merchant, "whose word is as good as his bond," "I would give fifty thousand dollars for your name."

"Why so?" asked the other, in some surprise.

"Because I could make a hundred thousand dollars out of it."

The honorable character which was at the bottom of the good name, he cared nothing for; it was only the good reputation, which he could turn to account in a money point of view which he coveted.

But a good name cannot be bought with silver; it, of all other possessions, must be fairly earned. When it is possessed, it is better business capital than a great sum of money. It is a capital any boy or girl may secure. Honesty must be its foundation even in the smallest particulars. When an employer says, "That is a boy I can trust," he will always find himself in demand, provided he joins with it industry. "The hand of the diligent maketh rich."

It seems hard at first, may be—this ceaseless round of work, while other boys are lounging about store steps or playing on the green. But the reward will come if you are faithful. While loungers are dragging out a miserable lifetime in privations and poverty, the hard-working boy lives at his ease, respected and honored.

Remember this if you desire to make your way in the world. There is nothing can serve your purpose like a name of honesty and industry; and you will never acquire either if you are a lounger about the streets, and a shirk at your business. Everybody suspects a lad who is often seen about saloon doors or tavern steps. It undermines a boy's character for honesty very rapidly to mix with society he finds there; and such habits tend to anything but industrious ways.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather then silver and gold." Print that text on your heart and carry it with you in all your walks and ways. It is worth far more than silver and gold to you.—Presbyterian.

Buffalo Bill.

Buffalo Bill was at Hartford Conn. the other day, and while visiting Colt's armory, the large number of spectators who had assembled to see the famous scout, desired him to favor them with an exhibition of his skill as a marksman. Bill gave the chew of tobacco in his mouth to a small boy to keep warm, a small piece of white paper was put upon a barn fifty rods, B. William seized a fine new rifle, spit on his hands, and in the manner so often described by Ned Buntline raised the rifle until his nose rested on the stock, fired and a picket was knocked off from a fence ten feet to the left of the barn. "This rifle barrel is crooked," said Bill, so saying he hit it over a stone to straighten it, then shot again, this time barking a shin of an old pie woman on his right flank. A third trial and he hit the mark fair in the centre, and the shout that arose from the assemblage attested the joy of the spectator at his success, Bill is just as good an actor as he is a marksman, which is very remarkable in these days of corruption and bribery.

A Sample of Chinese Devotion.

A recent edict issued by the emperor of China shows how tenaciously the Chinese still cling to their old customs and prejudices. Orders have been given for the erection of three memorial gateways to commemorate the virtues of as many noble ladies, who lately died by their own acts, and also to degrade Li-Kwang-liao, a mandarin, and uncle of two of the ladies, for acting contrary to the timehonored customs of the empire. The mandarin's older brother, after marrying a lady of great worth and beauty, and living happily with her for a number of years, suddenly died, leaving two daughters, both betrothed. His widow was inconsolable, and wept so incessantly that her health failed, and she became quite blind. Then afflictions began to multiply. The daughters were stricken with grief at their mother's calamity, and resolved to devote their lives to her in fasting and prayer that her sight might be restored. The young men, whose brides seemed on the point of being lost to them for ever, sought the intercession of the uncle. He urged them to fulfill their vows already made, before taking others that should render it impossible to do so in future, but they persisted in sacrificing everything to their mother, though she besought them to heed their uncle. The unhappy woman, feeling that she stood in the way of her daughters' happiness, and the happiness of those to whom they were betrothed, killed herself. This only made matters worse, and when the mandarin bade them prepare for their marriages, they resolved to complete their sacrifice, and hung themselves in their bedroom. The decree concludes: "Therefore, let the board of rites award to them the highest honors; and as for their uncle, the mandarin (Li-Kwang-liao) who preferred for his nieces fortunate marriages to lives of fasting of prayers, and filial devotion, let him be immediately degraded from all office of trust and honor, that others, seeing his disgrace, may tremble and beware."

—The proposition that members of Congress should give the $5,000 which they voted themselves as extra pay, towards defraying the cost of completing the Washington monument, is in no way creditable to the gratitude and patriotism of the country. Morally and in every manly sense, the vote which gave members of Congress $5,000 extra, is regarded as dishonorable, if not a disgraceful usurpation of power, and therefore the money thus received is looked upon by thousands of honest men as a steal. Would it be fitting to build a monument to the father of his country, with the stealings of faithless public servants? Surely not; and therefore the managers of the monument ought to refuse to recieve any such donations. Let Congress appropriate the money to complete this national work, and no man will object. But above all, let us preserve the memory of Washington from the insult proposed. He never ask for extra pay.—Harrisburg State Journal.

Lost and Saved.

Men are lost. Only truth can save them. Those who continue ignorant continue unsaved; but those who reject truth are doubly lost. "This is the condemnation, that light has come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light."

Men are lost. Only love can save them; for the central truth which brings salvation, and in obeying which the soul is purified, is the message of Divine love. "We have known and believed the love that God hath to us." "He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is love."

Men are lost. Only Christ can save them; for it is in him that the truth of God is manifested. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him." "Hereby precieve we the love of God," (St. John simply says "the love"—as though there were no love but this,) "because he laid down his life for us."

"Never put off till to-morrow what can be done to-day, dear Tommy," said mammy. "Then let us finish up the plum pudding to-night," said the sweet child.

—William Shakespear is attracting the attention of London musical circles. He is described as having already won high honors at the Royal Academy, and at a late Crystal Concert he produced an overture in two moments which is favorably spoken of by the critics.

RHEUMATISM NEURALGIA

WE CLERGYMEN WERE CURED

of Chronic and Acute Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Lumbago, Sciatica, Kidney, and Nervous Diseases, after years of suffering, by taking Dr. Fitler's Vegetable Rheumatic Syrup—the scientific discovery of J. P. Fitler, M. D., a regular graduate physician, with whom we are personally acquainted, who has for 39 years treated these diseases exclusively with astonishing results. We believe it our christian duty, after deliberation, to conscientiously request sufferers to use it, especially persons in moderate circumstances who cannot afford to waste time and money on worthless mixtures. As clergymen we seriously feel the deep responsibility resting on us in publicly endorsing this medicine. But our knowledge and experience of its remarkable merit fully justifies our action. Rev C. H. Ewing, Media, Penn'a, suffered sixteen years, became hopeless. Rev. Thomas Murphy, D. D., Frankford, Philadelphia. Rev. J. B. Davis, Hightstown, New Jersey. Rev. J. S. Buchanan, Clarence, Iowa. Rev. G. G. Smith, Pittsford, New York. Rev. Joseph Beggs, Falls Church, Philadelphia. Other testimonials from Senators, Governors, Judges, Congressmen, Physicians, &c., forwarded gratis with pamphlet explaining these diseases. One thousand dollars will be presented to any medicine for same diseases showing equal merit under test, or that can produce one-fourth as many living cures. Any person sending by letter description of affliction will receive gratis a legally signed guarantee, naming the number of bottles to cure, agreeing to refund money upon sworn statement of its failure to cure. Afflicted invited to write to Dr. Fitler, Philad'a. His valuable advice costs nothing.

WISHART'S PINE TREE.

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR THE

THROAT and LUNGS.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lung Diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation (which produces cough) of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

NOTICE.

The Pine Tree Tar Cordial,

Great American Dyspersia Pills,

AND

Worm Sugar Drops

Being under my immediate direction, they shall not lose their curative qualities by the use of cheap and impure articles.

Tumor of 12 Years' Growth Cured by Radway's Resolvent.

BEVERLY, MASS., July 18, 1869.

DR. RADWAY:—I have had Ovarian Tumor in the ovaries and bowels. All the Doctors said "there was no help for it." I tried every thing that was recommended; but nothing helped me. I saw your Resolvent, and thought I would try it; but had no faith in it, because I had suffered for twelve years. I took six bottles of the Resolvent, and one box of Radway's Pills, and two bottles of your Ready Relief; and there is not a sign of tumor to be seen or felt, and I feel better, smarter, and happier than I have for twelve years. The worst tumor was in the left side of the bowels, over the groin. I write this to you for the benefit of others. You can publish it if you choose. HANNAH P. KNAPP.
